Ice Fishing

Many people like to go fishing on lakes. It is a popular activity when the weather is warm, but it is difficult to do in many cold places in winter. This is because the lakes are often covered with ice. However, people who live in these areas can still enjoy ice fishing.

Ice fishing started in cold parts of North America. Some Native Americans lived in these areas a long time ago, and they needed fish for food in winter. Around 2,000 years ago, they discovered a way to catch fish when lakes were covered with ice. First, they walked onto the ice. Next, they made a hole in the ice. When they saw a fish, they caught it with a spear.

There is one problem with ice fishing. It is easy for fish to see people on the ice. Because of that, these days, people often use small houses when they go ice fishing. They put the houses on the ice and catch fish from inside the houses. It is dark inside the houses, so the fish can't see the people well. So, the fish come close without noticing the people.

People in Northern Europe started ice fishing around 500 years ago, and it is now popular in many cold places. Today, many people use electronic tools to get fish easily and quickly. There are also ice fishing events in many countries. The biggest ice fishing event in the world is held in Minnesota in the United States every year.
