Problems with Gulls in Towns

In some towns near the sea, white birds, called gulls, are often seen flying around. Today, they have negative impacts on (18). The problems include their behavior toward humans, noise problems, and the pollution caused by garbage bags broken by gulls. For example, in one town in the UK, a hockey facility had to be closed for a while because of the mess created by gulls. Also, some children were attacked by the birds and injured. These cases show that gulls can cause problems for human life.

There are several reasons why gulls have developed these behaviors. One of them is human activity. Humans are destroying the natural environment where these birds normally live. Also, it is becoming harder for them to find food. In fact, (19) despite their familiarity in town. This may explain their difficulty finding food. Because of less food and space to live, they have come to areas where humans live. Then, they search for food in garbage or build nests near humans.

Today, some cities are working to solve this problem. In Scotland, people are encouraged to create an environment where gulls do not build nests or create messes from garbage. For example, not leaving food outside and reducing food waste as much as possible are simple actions that individuals can take. Another approach is to put up nets to prevent gulls from building nests at places where they are likely to do so, like on roofs. (20), people are trying to protect their quality of life.

A New Way of Living

According to many studies around the world, these days, it is becoming more difficult for university students to find apartments that they can afford. A possible solution to this problem is a new type of shared living. In this kind of living experience, students live with elderly people who are not their family members. (21), in recent years, projects to have students and elderly people live together have appeared in several places, including university campuses in Canada, America, and the Netherlands.

There is an apartment building in America where hundreds of elderly people live together. Some music students also live there with them. These students play music for the elderly people and take care of them. In return, they can (22). This is because they can have their own rooms and receive meals for free. Also, by talking with elderly people, the students can build connections they may not find among their friends. They could even reduce stress in an environment away from school.

Another important thing is the advantages for elderly people. Nowadays, the problem of elderly people feeling lonely is attracting more attention. It is serious because they may suffer from mental and physical health issues. So, living with students may help to solve such a problem. It also allows elderly people to (23). For example, in a shared living project in the Netherlands, students teach elderly people how to use e-mail and social media. 大問3A Article about Your Baseball Game

メールを読み、次ページのQ24-Q26に答えなさい。

From: Claire Keaton
To: Dale Fletcher
Date: July 20
Subject: Article about your baseball game

Dear Dale,

My name is Claire Keaton. Thank you for calling the city's Events Department today. It is good to know that your high school team has an important match against a team from the nearby city of Silverpine Falls next month. We are happy to write an article about your baseball game in our city newspaper. Please send us the details of the game, such as the date, time, and location.

We would like to write an introduction about your team. So, any special information about your team would be great. For example, we would like you to share your team's past results against the other team and introduce any players that you think people should watch. Also, it would be nice if you could take a photo of your whole team and send it to us along with a short message from your coach.

We can finish writing the article in one week after you provide us with the details. After we write the article, we will send it to you before we publish it. Please read it and let us know if everything is correct. We are happy to help promote the game and support your team. So, we will not ask you to pay a fee at this time.

Thank you,
Claire Keaton

Solutions to Protect Environment and Culture

Uluru is one of the most famous tourist attractions in the world. This ancient rock is about 350 meters high. This huge red rock is located in the desert in central Australia. The area is home to rare plants, animals, and caves painted with rock art. It is believed that people have lived in the area of Uluru for at least 30,000 years, and the rock art shows the history of people's lives.

Some people worry about the environment around Uluru because it has become worse due to the impact of tourists. For example, some visitors leave garbage or camp near the rock. Tourists were warned not to climb Uluru because it is considered an important place in the culture of the native people in the area. Although they asked tourists not to climb it, many people lined up to hike on the rock. After that, the rock was closed for climbing.

When the rock was closed for climbing, the native people faced a new challenge. Uluru was an important part of the community's economy because many tourists used to visit the area to climb the rock. However, when they were not allowed to do so anymore, the number of tourists was expected to decrease. So, the native people needed to find a new way to attract people and keep the number of tourists in the area while reminding them to respect the local culture.

There is a cultural event that can solve this challenge. Developed by local organizations and the native people, the event uses drones, which are small flying machines. More than 1,000 drones with lights fly over Uluru at night. The drones perform light shows by creating artwork that tells an important story of the native people in the night sky. Today, many tourists come to watch the show. In this way, the event may become known worldwide in the future as a way to balance cultural respect and tourism.
