大問4A Visit to Museum

メールを読み、次ページのQ31-Q33に答えなさい。

From: Jenny Smith
To: Ai Tanaka
Date: June 5
Subject: Visit to museum

How are things in Japan? I hope that you had fun by the ocean last month. I know how much you love swimming and playing in the sand with your friends. I had a great vacation, too. Last week, I stayed with my aunt and uncle in Pennsylvania. They live on a farm about 50 kilometers from a city called Pittsburgh. My brother and I enjoyed playing outside in nature.

One day, it rained, so we decided to go into the city and see the natural history museum there. The museum was cool because it has many dinosaur bones. It also has an amazing collection of colorful rocks. My favorite part was the "PaleoLab," though. There, scientists prepare old bones from dinosaurs and other animals for the museum. The scientists work in a special room with a large window, so museum visitors can watch them.

My mom says there is a natural history museum here in Chicago, too. She said that she would take you, me, and my brother there when you come to visit the United States next month. We can spend the whole day at the museum if we go early. Let me know if you're interested. I can't wait to see you!

The Return of the Wolves

Wolves are intelligent animals that live in groups called packs. Long ago, packs of wolves could be found in many European countries, including Germany. However, farmers hunted wolves because they sometimes killed the farmers' sheep. Other people hunted wolves for sport. By the 19th century, there were no wolves left in Germany. In the last 20 years, though, wolves have started to return to the country.

In the 1980s and 1990s, European countries made laws to protect wildlife and created special areas for wild animals. At the same time, many people left their farms in eastern Europe to take jobs abroad. The result was that there were fewer people and more safe places for deer and other animals that wolves like to eat. As the number of these animals increased, the number of wolves increased, too. The wolves spread west, and in 2001, they were found living in Germany again.

There are now over 120 packs of wolves in Germany, but not all of them live in the special areas for wild animals. A lot of wolves prefer places that the army uses for training. Experts think this is because these places are safe for the wolves. It seems that some people have been hunting wolves in Germany, even though they are not allowed to. However, these people are afraid of entering army training centers because they might get caught.

Other animals, including rare birds, have also been protected by army training centers. There used to be many army training centers in Europe. However, some of them are no longer needed. In 2015, the German government created parks for wildlife from 62 old army training centers. This increased the total size of such parks in the country by 25 percent. Now, there are plans to bring back horses, bison, and other wild animals to these parks, too.

大問4B 長文設問 Q34-Q37

前ページの本文を読み、最も適切なものを1つ選びなさい。

(34) What is one reason that wolves disappeared from Germany?

- 1 They were hunted to stop them from killing farm animals.
- 2 The animals that wolves ate were all killed by farmers.
- 3 Farmers in Germany started keeping cows instead of sheep.
- 4 People made farms in the places where the wolves lived.

(35) Why did many people in eastern Europe leave their farms in the 1980s and 1990s?

- 1 Their farms were bought to create areas for wild animals.
- 2 The number of wolves and other animals suddenly increased.
- 3 New laws in European countries said that they had to leave.
- 4 They had chances to go and work in other countries.

(36) Many wolves prefer living in army training centers because

- 1 the soldiers at the centers give them food from the kitchens.
- 2 people who hunt them are too scared to go in the centers.
- 3 a lot of people visit the special areas for wild animals.
- 4 there are fewer roads than in other parts of Germany.

(37) The German government

- 1 plans to open 62 new army training centers.
- 2 moved some rare birds to protect them.
- 3 brought horses and bison to parks in 2015.
- 4 has provided more land for wild animals.
